ITAL 449/559: Women Writers- Hester ♦
This course examines the rich and varied contributions of Italian women writers in the 16th and 17th centuries. Specifically, we will consider the relationship between gender and genre and read examples of lyric poetry, epistolary writing, treatises in defense of women. Discussions will take into consideration different early modern notions of and representations of woman, and will elucidate the ways in which women writers—whether noblewomen, nuns, actresses, or courtesans—represent themselves and women characters in their texts. Among the authors whose works we will read are Vittoria Colonna, Veronica Franco, Isabella Andreini, Lucrezia Marinella, and Arcangela Tarabotti. Taught in Italian. MA period 2 return to course list

ITAL 461/561: Vico, the Settecento and Modern Autobiography- Lollini ♦
In this course we will first examine different perspectives on Western view of individuality, focusing our attention on the idea of “autobiography” as it emerges in Modern Europe, paying particular attention to the intersection between philosophical, religious and literary discourses. We will begin with a theoretical and historical overview on the questions and concepts involved in writing the self. Is it possible a general theory of autobiography? What is the role of “truth” and “fiction” in autobiographical discourse? What are the differences between confessions, memoirs and autobiographies? How do humanist and Renaissance notions of self-fashioning influence the autobiographical discourse? Is there a role for intersubjectivity in autobiography? How does the landscape contribute to the formation of modern ideas of subjectivity? Then, we will address the specific character of literary autobiography emerging in eighteenth-century Italy. We will read selections from the autobiographies of an artist, Benvenuto Cellini (1558-56), a woman mystic, Veronica Giuliani (1624-1725), a philosopher, Giambattista Vico (1725), a playwright, Carlo Goldoni (1787), two poets, Vittorio Alfieri (1790) and woman poet inspired by the Academy of Arcadia, Angela Veronese (1826), and an adventurer, Giacomo Casanova (1791-1798). Special consideration will be given to Vico’s autobiography as the ontogenesis of his thought and reenactment of the phylogenesis of human kind developed in his major work, the New Science (1725-1744). Drawing on the notions and techniques learned from the readings, undergraduate students may opt to write their own autobiography instead of the final paper. M.A. Period 3 return to course list

RL 608: Workshop on Teaching Methodology -Davis
This course is the starting point for pre-professional training in the teaching of Romance languages (French, Italian, and Spanish) to adults. The class readings, lectures, discussions, and portfolio activities will help you to:
• design and implement a complete instructional sequence for new material, with attention to sequencing of activities, learning styles, and modes of communication (presentational, interpretive, interpersonal);
• personalize instruction for a diverse group of learners, with different motivations and interests in language study;
• demonstrate knowledge and understanding of major concepts and the historical context of the field of language learning and teaching in the U.S.;
• utilize effectively and appropriately a range of technologies for the second language classroom; and
• reflect on your own professional practice and by analyzing and evaluating your own teaching and that of your peers.

This class is required of all new GTFs in Romance Languages. return to course list

ITAL 341: Dante in Translation- Psaki

ITAL 407/507: Popular Genre Cinema- Rigoletto ♦
Italian cinema has generally been seen as a source of films for the international art house circuit. Unsurprisingly, most of the publications and university courses on Italian Cinema tend to focus on Neorealism and on some of the iconic directors of the European auteur film canon (Pasolini, Fellini, Antonioni etc.). This course looks at another kind of Italian cinema. It explores the significance of some of the popular genre films that made Italy, for much of the post-war period, the largest European export market in Europe (melodramas, westerns, commedie all’italiana, peplum, horror, sex comedies etc.). Students will learn to identify the particular formulas, conventions and generic codes used by these films. The course will also explore the notions of ‘popularity’ and ‘popular entertainment’ in order to assess their meanings in the Italian context.

RL 407/507: Re-reading Petrarch in the Digital Era- Lollini
Stanley Fish has recently posed an important question that will be at the core of this course: “Does the digital humanities offer new and better ways to realize traditional humanities goals? Or does the digital humanities completely change our understanding of what a humanities goal (and work in the humanities) might be?” We will look for provisional and partial answers to these broad questions focusing on the Oregon Petrarch Open Book project being developed at the University of Oregon. We will address in a new perspective the relevance of Petrarch’s Canzoniere to the formation of modern lyric and love discourse, exploring various ideas of subjectivity as they relate to reconfigured notions of authorship and readership in the digital environment. In true Web 2.0 fashion, students in selected activities (from transcribing manuscripts, incunabula and commentaries, to studying different translations and modern re-writings, from analyzing intersemiotic transpositions to creating tweets) will become discussants and contributors to the ongoing dialogue with the text and among its readers. The class will be organized in a scale-up learning environment specifically created to facilitate active, collaborative learning in a studio-like setting. Depending on the focus of their final projects graduate students may apply this course to the credits for M.A. Periods 1, 2, 3 or 4.

RL 407/507: Gendered Experiences of the Holocaust in the Romance World- Herrmann
This course will be designed around the concept of gender, looking to explore the ways in which gender identity, sexuality, love relationships, parenthood, and sexual violence impacted how individuals and groups experienced the Holocaust. Students will come away with a deeper understanding of the points of difference and similarity between male and female experiences in a variety of situations, including early persecution, concentration camp life, life in hiding, the fate of families, and the impact of the Holocaust on survivor’s gendered sense of self. The course aims to be interdisciplinary, and will expose students to texts from history, literature, autobiography, and film. Students will moreover devote a unit of study to the experiences of gays and lesbians; to how gender identity is expressed in Holocaust memoirs, diaries, and art. Because this course is cross-listed with Romance Languages, it will focus primarily, but not exclusively, on the production about and by people from Italy, France, Spain and Romania.
Students seeking credit in French, Italian or Spanish will need to read primary texts in the target language and also write reviews of two target language critical articles or chapters dealing with the primary text. Graduate students will write a final research paper of 12 pages. return to course list

RL 607: Doctoral Workshop- Taylor

Intercultural and Collaborative Approaches for Doctoral and Pre-Doctoral Candidates. This workshop is designed to give advanced Romance Languages PhD students the opportunity to share their writing and engage in constructive peer critique. Participants will have the opportunity to hone research and writing abilities in English and, to the best of our collective abilities, in the romance language(s) in which we work. We will also cover topics of professionalization specific to doctoral candidates charting unique research trajectories and preparing for the job market in higher education such as: identifying sources of internal and external funding; writing grant proposals; identifying and participating in relevant scholarly organizations, events and publications; assembling a dossier and preparing for interviews. return to course list

SPRING 2014

ITAL 305: Cultura e lingua: arte, musica, i mass media- Cecacci

Artistic expressions over time and the influence of the mass media on social structures and language. return to course list

ITAL 307: Oral Skills (2 credits)- Pazzaglia

Practice in improving listening, comprehension, and oral skills in Italian. Communicative activities in class in addition to language laboratory work. Prereq: ITAL 203 return to course list

ITAL 317: Medieval and Renaissance- Psaki ◊

Introduction to major themes and ideas in Italian literature and art from the medieval and Renaissance periods. return to course list

ITAL 491/591: Sicily, Sardina, and the Mediterranean- Lollini  ♦

In this course we will study the emergence of an Italian Ecocriticism tracing its origin in Giambattista Vico’s idea of “poetic geography” and following its more recent developments, including the idea of Italian literary bioregionalism and ecological citizenship (Serenella Iovino). We will focus our attention on the problematic relationships between culture and nature and investigate the active role that the natural environment plays in shaping questions of cultural, regional and national belonging as they transpire in literature and cinema. We will study in particular the role of the Mediterranean in promoting contradictory phenomena such as insularity and isolation, cultural pluralism and colonialism. On the one hand, we will consider how Mediterranean landscape has influenced Italian culture and sense of identity and belonging in different bioregional systems, with special attention devoted to Sicily and Sardinia. On the other hand, we will study how human and historical activity has modified and adulterated the Mediterranean landscape from the formation of the Italian national state up to the present time. Ultimately, our goal is to become able to realize and appreciate the crucial role that literature and cinema play in spreading the much needed awareness of the interconnectedness of all living forms, of a comprehensive sense of place and ecological citizenship.

RL 407/507: Liberation and Critique around the 1970s: French and Italian Theories of Sex and Gender from a Bygone Age - Schachter
This course will take as its point of departure a thread of critical thought that was largely and perhaps prematurely abandoned: the radical thinking about sex and gender in France and Italy during the 1970s characterized by a queer combination of Marxism and psychoanalysis. Marxism had often been inattentive to questions of gender and, at least in its political manifestations, frequently suspicious of homosexuality while psychoanalysis could serve advocates of “normative” development, but numerous revolutionary thinkers concerned with what we might provisionally call the sex-gender system nonetheless turned to them in articulating liberatory theories of the polymorphously desiring subject and developing potent critiques of the family, reproduction, patriarchy, heterosexuality, sometimes homosexuality, and indeed identity itself. After surveying some of these critical theories of the subject and a few equally critical responses to them, we will briefly address subsequent developments in thinking about sex and gender in Italy and France as well as the influence of this work in the Anglophone world. We will also think about whether these radical critical projects from a prior generation might not have renewed relevance for literary and cultural analyses pursued in an age when major advancements in civil rights (however unequally distributed) often go hand in hand with the normalization of political aspiration. Readings will include works by Mario Mieli, Guy Hocquenghem, Monique Wittig, Luce Irigaray, Adriana Cavarero and Michel Foucault, among others. Discussions will be held in English. Most if not all assigned texts will be made available in English as well as the original language if it is not English. Students in Romance Languages will be expected to read in their target languages when possible. return to course list

RL 407/507: Theorizing the Plantation - Millar
What is the Plantation, and what have been its effects on Caribbean and Latin American culture? This course will examine the development of the Plantation in the Americas as an economic, political, socio-historical and cultural marker of modernity. Our goals will be to think through theoretical and literary writings on the plantation system and its associated socio-cultural institutions (colonialism, slavery, sugarocracy, etc.) in Spanish, French and Portuguese-language contexts. We will discuss questions such as: How does the Plantation change as a system through time and in different places? What intersecting sources and forms of knowledge come about through the Plantation, and what kinds of social and epistemological violence does the Plantation produce? How does the Plantation serve as both a violent and repressive, as well as a nostalgic and idyllic, counterpoint to the metropolis, while it simultaneously becomes a site of economic and industrial modernization? All readings will be available in English and the language of their composition. MA Periods 3 and 4.

RL 407/507: Medieval Literature & Music- Wacks
This course provides an overview of lyric composition and performance in the Iberian Peninsula from the 11th to the 16th centuries. In it, we will study courtly lyric and music of al-Andalus, of Christian Iberia, and of the Jewish communities under both Islamic and Christian rule. In particular we will examine courtly appropriations of popular styles, Church music, the question of the Andalusi influence on troubadour lyric, and modern interpretations of medieval Iberian lyric modes such as the muwashshah, the troubadour lyric, the villancico/cantiga de amigo, and the cancionero corpus of courtly lyric. This course will be co-taught with by Prof. Lori Krukenberg (School of Musician and Dance) and Prof. David Wacks (Dept. Romance Languages).

RL 410/510 Language Teaching Planning- Barnett
Application of teaching principles and practices in teaching instruction. Practical techniques for developing activities to incorporate three modes of communication (presentational, interpretive, and interpersonal) as well as skills in listening, speaking, reading, and writing second languages. This course is normally offered as LT 436/536 and is for students seeking the certificate in Second Language Acquisition and Teaching (SLAT). Interested RL students not seeking SLAT certificate should contact instructor (cbbarnet@uoregon.edu).

RL 623: Film Aesthetics: Sex- Rigoletto & Herrmann
This course has two objectives: the first is to teach students how to perform a critical analysis of films. The course aims to give students the skills and knowledge necessary for understanding film form and film style. Students will learn how to analyze film narrative, mise-en-scene, camera movement, cinematography, editing etc. The second objective of the course is to think about the functions of sex in cinema. We will ask some questions about the conditions that inform and regulate the visibility (or invisibility) of particular forms of carnal knowledge, desires, and practices in films. We will also explore the kind of spectatorial experiences that are produced through this cinematic encounter with sex. return to course list
