

My personal learning environment can be divided into three part — —academic, online and real environment.

My academic environment is likely any of the others, courses from the university of Oregon, going to libraries and getting access to the university library systems. As well by reading the textbooks and accomplish my school works, essays, presentations and group works. My undergraduate academic environment is quite different. I am enrolled in the program of film marketing, so by watching on show movies is an essential learning source for me, which is very much a diffident way to study than any other university students, and also coming with made some short films by ourselves as the producer.

My online learning environment is a lot likely as any of us, using the blackboard and course website to get access with reading materials for coming courses, uploading my school works in my student eportfolio and using gmail, google docs to complete group works online. Online platform make everything much easier, by social networks, easily scrolling the Tweet Facebook page, it is easy to get informed by what the university or the program is going on. The internet is really important tools for nowadays learning, there are all kinds of data of information up in the air, which I can say the internet is the most important learning tools for me.

The real environment, or to say, based on the location environment include libraries, coffee shops, museums and as for me, cinemas and theaters to get myself informed with what the film market is going on, I went to cinema each week and whenever a new, big one is on show. River banks and mountain hikes can also be my place to learn, it feels so good to bring a book outdoors.
